ABOUT THE COURSE

This course is suitable for aspirant environmental education practitioners and educators working in municipalities, the private sector or with communities aiming to equip others with improved environmental understanding and skills for sustainability. The course considers approaches to environmental teaching and learning, ideal for individuals engaging with others in the environmental sector and particularly relevant for teachers, trainers and environmental practitioners.

A wide variety of methods and approaches to environmental education are explored during the 5 day contact sessions, with a strong hands on focus and flexibility to incorporate a particular environmental issue or risk.

The course consists of the following unit standards:

- 13637 – Network broadly in order to source information and support around a key environmental issue or risk (4 credits)
- 13651 – Review a variety of approaches to learning, teaching and evaluation (4 credits)
- 13632 – Demonstrate knowledge of environmental education goals, principles and methods and their appropriateness in different contexts (4 credits)

“The Enviro Eds is relevant to our job description as we are also involved in environmental education learning programmes. The materials and the knowledge gained can be used effectively to accomplish our own goals as well as those within our organisation.” Lungelo Mkhize, Sibongile Jiyane & Fortunate Nonyane, March 2015
